THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1881.

IN HIS PRONOUNCEMENT published in the Philadelphia Record of last Saturday, the Attorney-General declared that "Mr. Corkhill will soon be removed." We have since ascertained that the Attorney-General's declaration touching Mr. Corkhill was utterly devoid of foundation. There is not now, nor has there been, the least intention on the part of the President to make any change in the office of District Attorney. The Attorney-General's declaration in his pronouncement may have been based upon the fact that Detective Gibson had ordered the Attorney-General to order the President to remove Mr. Corkhill. There could be no other possible foundation for it.

MARSHAL McMAHON is about to write a book on his presidency of the French Republic. Evidently the Marshal has no Budeau among his collection of relics.

THE proposed conference between Grant and Garfield does not seem to make much headway. Perhaps Gen. Garfield is learning the art of being select as to the company he keeps.

LEADING ITALIANS in Paris have officially frowned down the hissing indolence in by some of their countrymen against the French at Marseilles. That's all right. Now we can resume operations at Albany.

WHILE the Cabinet was in session to-day at the Branch establishment by the sad sea waves. Mr. Kirkwood, who was left to hold the fort, had a photograph of that popular resort stuck up before him, and took a quiet whiff of the ocean air in his dreams.

UPON has gone to Europe on some government mission. Europe has a great deal to commend it. Besides art galleries and things, it is a plausible half-way house for officials of the United States who are on the down-grade to private life. Ask Conant.

WE OBSERVE that the Porte is closing up all the post-offices in Constantinople under the plea that they are being used to disseminate incendiary documents. This is quick work. We thought it would take longer for MacVegh's precedent to reach the Sultan.

AN ASTRONOMER down in Buenos Ayres has caught a comet, due in 3355, coming after his region in the year of our Lord 1881. If this comet is running on a revised time-table, it might be just as well for some of the heavenly bodies in this neighborhood to be informed of the change.

THE Springfield Republican intimates that Henri Watterson "is the only man living who knows exactly what the principles of the Democratic party are," and expresses "fear that the secret may die with him." We do not share the apprehension of our esteemed contemporary. No secrets of importance will die with Henri. He is one of our most fluent conversationalists.

THE CRITIC is rapidly getting its machinery and facilities ready to meet all the demands of enlarged business. Improved presses and a larger force will soon be available. We shall have a telegraph operator in the office, at his desk, to receive news to the latest moment before going to press, and our special wire from New York will transmit the latest intelligence from all parts of the world.

THE following is the latest bulletin issued from Room 59:
The postponement of the star-route indictments until September appears to be inevitable and unavoidable. The prosecuting officers are very much disappointed over the delay.

The disappointment of the prosecuting officers fills us with sympathetic sadness. Mr. Gibson is doubtless nearly overwhelmed with grief at the prospect of his twelve dollars a day going on till fall.

JUDGE LOCHRANE, of Georgia, says to a reporter of the Atlanta Constitution:
You want a point. The son of old Abe Lincoln, the present Secretary of War, will be President of these United States. He was one of the 306 Grant men at Chicago, and could bring that wing up. He's with the Administration, and will not be dissatisfied to that wing. Do I know him? I do, and he's a man with the same wonderful magnetism that his father had. You look out for Bob Lincoln!

We have had Robert's name in type for some time.

WHEN Henry S. Lane, of Indiana, died the other day, the Chicago papers ran in the obituaries they had used for Gen. Joe Lane, of Oregon. This is cruelly refined. These two worthies were in the Senate together when the war was brewing, but old Joe Lane announced that if the Government attempted to coerce the South it would have to brush his remains out of the way as a preliminary step. Henry had a different doctrine. These two Lanes always diverged widely from that point, but met at a common grave within two months of one another.

QUEBEC has had another fire that burned down a good many residences, and created one of the panics that they seem to be rather proud of in that town. Under this stimulation the citizens, awakened thoroughly to the condition of things, are considering the best manner of organizing an opposition to an additional tax, proposed as a means of supplying a new system of waterworks. They really seem to have strong objections to that common fluid in that town; perhaps this is the reason that Mother Shipton found so many converts in the locality.

"As a consequence of the curbing-in of the Attorney-General," it is remarked by THE CRITIC that "Mr. Blaine's enemies are beginning to despair of even the Government."

The above is respectfully commended to Room 59 as "additional evidence." Of course the "consequentiality" of the thing is unavoidable. It can't even be dodged. Here is how it happened: We keep a par-grapher—that is to say, we indulge in the luxury of having about us a man of genius who contracts to purvey half a column of wit per diem, in parcels of not over ten lines each, for a munificent salary. It occurred to this young man one day, apropos of a change in the Attorney-General's daily bulletin of Mr. Blaine's alleged ill health, to write as follows:

"Mr. Blaine's enemies are beginning to despair of even the Government. Great things were expected of that gout."

Whereupon the Intelligent Composer, of which luxury we also keep a large supply on hand, printed the following:
"Mr. Blaine's enemies are beginning to despair of even the Government. Great things were expected of that gout."

As we said before, there can be no doubt about the "consequentiality" of this thing. A man who can make a Government out of the gout would be invaluable in the business of manufacturing evidence. Room 59 ought also to retain the Sun man. No fellow who can make great "consequences" of State out of a typographical error can properly be spared from the side of Billy Cook in the pending cause celebre.

IN ANOTHER COLUMN will be found the proceedings in the Criminal Court this morning on Mr. Totten's motion in behalf of General Brady, for immediate adjudication of the alleged case against him. General Brady's letter, upon which Mr. Totten based his motion, is a document that cannot fail to arrest the attention of the general public; and while it is too much to expect that anything but lapse of time and the sober second thought of the people can dispense the prejudice and hate aroused by the newspaper trial so adroitly manipulated by Gibson, MacVegh & Co., the fact and the mode of General Brady's demand must call at least a moment's halt in the campaign of calumny.

At all events the affair, on its face, and beyond even the most malignant ingenuity of misrepresentation, changes the relative attitude of the parties completely and disposes of the assertion so industriously circulated by the prosecution that the General desired postponement of the threatened proceedings against him. As we said before there is little unexpected in any immediate development of fairness on the part of the syndicate of newspapers which have been doing MacVegh's howling. But the general public, whose average instinct is that of fairness and whose average sentiment is that of admiration for bold and open methods, will be very likely to draw some contrasts between the shuffling, indirect and bush-whacking methods of the prosecution thus far and the frank, manly demand of the principal victim for his constitutional privileges. We know nothing about the merits of the case either way. But it strikes us that it would require a pretty thorough saturation with hate and prejudice to see in General Brady's attitude the behavior of a man trembling with fear of conviction.

"A CANADIAN astronomer," too modest as yet to give his name to the anxious world, has become envious of the fame of Venner and predicts by telegraph that the month of July is to be "excessively hot." This anonymous prophet says that the excessively hot weather of July is to be caused by "a return of heated air from the equatorial regions," whither, we presume, it has been driven by the prevailing polar wave. Our advice to the public is to look out for plenty of this class of predictions during the next ten days. It should be borne in mind that there is a good deal of money invested in what are called summer resorts in this country, and that the investors thereof have been sorely troubled by Prof. Venner's prediction that the coming summer was to be cooler than the average, with abundance of rain, a state of things calculated to prevent overworking of summer resort accommodations. The natural inference from all these things would be that a syndicate of summer resort proprietors had been formed to pool their issues, and it were, in a fund for the purpose of suborning prophetic perjury against the character of the month of July, with a view, of course, to securing "guests" for their hotels. It is the duty of a public spirited newspaper to expose such a disreputable scheme and to denounce it as a deliberate attempt to obtain a valuable consideration under false pretenses. The alleged "Canadian astronomer" should be handed around.

THE FIGHT at Marseilles is described as a very ugly scrimmage. The rioters did not mass themselves in opposition and meet squarely, as they do in this country, making a kind of front row in which the opponents stand face to face, and while producing a great deal of noise contrive to do very little harm. These rare events with us are rather regarded as a forcible demonstration of opinion and an emphatic expression of some public objection than as a personal conflict between enemies, and the casualties resulting bear a very small proportion to the number of rioters engaged. In Marseilles the job was conducted on very different principles. Particular individuals were singled out as obnoxious and pursued to extermination in the fierce fashion of a personal enmity rather than in neighborhood interchange of a free fight. The number of victims is considerable, and the Italians are already anxiously defending themselves against the charge of having used the national stiletto rather too freely.

A HEREDITARY sequence in special service is so unusual in this country that it is reported as noteworthy that Charles Forrester, Jr., who died a few days ago in New York, was a member of a post-office family. His grandfathers entered the New York post office in 1808. Eighteen years later his own son became his assistant, and still continues in office, after more than half a century of service, and is the survivor of his own son, who has just died, after twenty years in the same employment. The three generations have thus been in continuous position for nearly three-quarters of a century.

THE CONSTANT GRINDING of a worn-out old organ has driven the residents of a certain locality in New York to protest against it as public nuisance. They make their complaint to the Board of Health, demanding relief for their tortured sensibilities, and they will receive ready sympathy from those who have groomed helplessly under similar afflictions. The incessant repetition of a slight pain was used by the old inquisitors as the most effective means of breaking down their victims. Monotony seems to add the final touch to tortures and excites the nerves into a frenzied activity utterly beyond the control of reason. We once beheld a scene in a fish-market that dramatically presented the case in point. A fish-wife, big and booming, was calling lustily for a policeman to defend her from a barrel organ. The musician had planted himself beside her stall, and no entreaties would move him. He was dark and slight; the fish-wife could have annihilated him with her fair fists, but she was too chivalrous to attack so small a chap. The absurdity of the situation struck her; she apologized to the market at large with a laughing protest: "Of course I can stand most things, and hold my own with anybody with my tongue, but that organ I can't stand!" A tender-hearted policeman came to the rescue, and the fish-wife, rather ashamed to confess that there was anything "too much for her," gave the defeated organist some money as he moved on.

THERE is a very encouraging bit of news from England. The people of London are continuing the good work of affixing explanatory tablets to the houses of historic interest, and the residences of many distinguished men have been recently so marked. A mural inscription is modest and convenient, and it has the special advantage of affixing so limited a space for display that baffled ostentatious reticence and disgust, leaving the small field to discretion and common sense. In one sad instance in Washington a house has been so stamped, and no tribute could be more proper or deferential to the memory there enshrined. Such a recognition is one of the most substantial honors that can be paid to the illustrious dead. It conveys in its very existence the proof that their lives are still held in remembrance, and that the places that know them no longer are still sought by successive generations. These tablets furnish to the public a free and authentic lesson in history that is more powerful than a commonplace and valetudinary in stimulating a noble endeavor in a young mind, or encouraging a despondent spirit to strive to leave a mark upon the world in which he dwells. In another aspect, these mural monuments are especially to be welcomed as offering a possible protection against the threatened invasion of statues and statues are so expensive, so big and so ugly, and they always have to be unveiled! It is so cruelly and deceitfully easy to vote a statue, and so dreadfully hard to execute it, and usually such a fearful disaster that the general sense of the community is pretty well prepared, in case of any new proposed tribute of honor, to exclaim: "Take any shape but that!"

AN INSTANCE of genuine and unostentatious royalty is found in the Princess Marie of Shoa. The trifling talk of numbered quarters upon coats of arms shrank abashed before the claims, invidious of rank and perhaps all other costs, may be voted out of the question. This lady boasts of blue blood; indeed, a very blue blood, that she traces backward through her royal father, directly to that of Queen of Sheba, who visited King Solomon. This is something which is not claimed by any of the royal houses of Europe, and it is a line of ancestry for three thousand years may well be displayed, and the princess will probably have a dining room to put it in, for she has been educated by a Catholic priest presumably into many of the customs of our very modern civilization, and as she has reached the mature age of fourteen, she has been married to one of the native princes. The august father through whom the lady inherits her immense line of ancestors is King Menekel of Shoa, a prince of Abyssinia.

THE QUIET STREETS of Madrid have been enlivened occasionally for months by the explosion of bombs. They have been popping off anywhere and at any time in such an unsystematic and ineffective fashion that the first startled surprise ascribed to them by the Nihilists was soon abandoned. It has been supposed that they have been the singular method of protest adopted by the gamblers, who consider themselves much aggrieved by the surveillance of the governmental authorities, and this opinion is justified by the confession of a young man recently arrested with a petard in his possession. He implicates a large number of the gamblers as having entered into a conspiracy to intimidate the public and compel the government to relax its vigilant observation over their operations.

WHEN a young man of Virginia city remarks melodiously that he "won't go home till morning," it will hereafter be considered prudent for his friends to avoid offering any objections. When some loving comrades undertook recently to help a too merry and unwell fellow home, he humorously displayed his pistol, killing one of them on the spot, wounding another severely, and finishing up the job properly by fatally wounding himself.

OCEANS of tears have been shed over the harrowing tales of the sufferings inflicted by cruel and exacting landlords, but Jersey is going to show the other side of the story. The landlords of Camden, indignant at the oppression under which they have long and silently suffered, are forming an association for defense against the dishonesty of tenants.

The Columbia Boat Club has selected Messrs. Williams, Lake, Smith and Zeigler as the crew to represent them at the Richmond regatta. Mr. L. C. Moore, of the same club will enter the single scull race. The crew is in active training.
